Connections

Connecting your personal computer with a system stereo component

Use the supplied PC connecting adaptor and USB cable to connect your personal computer with a system stereo component.

The diagram below shows an example of the MDS-PC3 connected to a PC.

Notes

- Make sure the plug is straight when you insert it. Inserting it at an angle may damage the connector parts.
- If you connect the digital audio output jack on the PC connecting adaptor to the digital optical audio input connector on a system stereo component using a digital connecting cable fitted with a rectangular connector, you will be able to enjoy audio files stored on your computer's hard disk or CDs in your computer's CD-ROM drive on the system stereo component. Refer to the operating instructions supplied with the system stereo component for connection details.
- By connecting an active speaker system to the analog audio output jack (stereo mini-jack) provided on the PC connecting adaptor through an audio connecting cord (not supplied), you can listen to the audio output from your computer.

This jack, however, should not be connected to the analog input connector on a system stereo component, since noise may be generated due to the incompatibility between the components.
